

I am adamantly against the petition to kill wireless portability. Under the current situation, true competition does not exist. As a wireless customer, I know that the only reason I stay with a particular provider is because of the aggravations I would encounter in having to change my number, a number many people use today as their only contact number. Furthermore, I believe that if true competition did exist, customer service would be improved greatly, a current grief of mine. I see no reason why number portability, which currently exists on land lines, cannot effectively exist on wireless as well. I believe that number portability is the only way to go, for both the customer and the provider. Therefore, I respectfully ask that Verizon's petition be denied.
